

“The fact that drugs help some people but not others is not exceptional; in fact, it is the rule for drugs and a principle which was established around 40 years ago by researchers studying pharmacogenetics.

“Millions, for instance, get less pain relief from codeine – because their particular variant of a gene called CYP2D6 is unable to convert codeine into its

An adverse reaction to prescription drugs is common

